The church was decorated with palms, ferns and Southern smilax, and a color scheme of pink and green which carried out at the reception, which followed at the home of the bride's parents, the bride's table being decorated with a large basket of pink roses and lighted with pink candles, while the chandeliers were festooned with vines of clematis, flowers and ferns added beauty to all the rooms.

The principal address in the day's program was that of L. M. Rhoades, of Tennessee, secretary of the association. Appointment of committees to further various lines of work proposed was the chief business before the convention.

This Will Soon Banish All Objectionable Hairs
(Modes of To-day.)

Beauty specialists have discovered a new and simple method for ridding the skin of objectionable hair or fuzz, and invariably but one application is required to obtain the desired results. A paste is made with powdered delatone and water and applied for two minutes to the hairy surface, then rubbed off and the skin washed and dried. This treatment removes every trace of hair and leaves the skin firm and smooth. Disappointment will be averted if you buy the delatone in an original package.—Advertisement.

CANADIAN MINEOWNER ROYALLY DESCENDED

Colonel Sir Augustus Fitzgeorge Is Now on Visit to This Country.

BY LA MARQUESE DE FONTENAY.

COLONEL SIR AUGUSTUS FITZGEORGE, who has just arrived in New York on board the Cunard liner Carmania, en route to the Cobalt mines district of Canada, owned by the company of which he is president, and who will afterwards pay a series of visits in the Dominion and the United States, has royal blood in his veins, as a great-grandson of King George III. He is the youngest of the three sons of the late Duke of Cambridge by the latter's marriage with Miss Fanebrother, a popular Irish actress, whose acquaintance he had made at Dublin.

The marriage was celebrated on January 8, 1847, in the Church of St. John's, in Clerkenwell, London, the name of the royal bridegroom appearing on the parish register as George Frederick Cambridge, of the Parish of St. Paul, Defford. But inasmuch as the duke and duchess were not crowned, in accordance with the statutory requirements of the royal marriage act, the union was invalid in the eyes of the law, and the duke's bride never officially recognized as his wife nor permitted to share his honors and dignities. She was known as Mrs. Fitzgeorge, and whereas he ostensibly resided at Grosvenor House, Grosvenor Lane, in Piccadilly, she lived in a house near-by, where her children were brought up. She never appeared at any of the dinners or entertainments that were given at Grosvenor House, was never received at court, and remained wholly in the background.

Colonel Sir Augustus Fitzgeorge was the youngest of the sons whom she bore to the duke. He was educated at Sandhurst, served in the Rifle Brigade in Canada for five years, from 1865 to 1870, was on the staff of Lord Napier in India, was transferred to the Rifle Brigade in 1871, and served in the Indian Army for the last ten or fifteen years of his father's life, acting as his private secretary and equerry. It was for the service which he thus rendered to the duke of Cambridge as a member of his royal household, and not because he happened to be the duke's son, that on his father's death he was knighted by King Edward and decorated, with the Star of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. He received the bulk of the fortune left by the duke, for his elder brother, Admiral Lord Colborne, died before he was born. He is now, through his marriage with the daughter of the late Thomas Holden, while the duke's daughter, the late Colonel George Fitzgeorge, was disinherited by the duke, owing to the amount already spent by his father in extricating him from one financial difficulty after the other.

It is the widow of Colonel George Fitzgeorge, who flourished for a time in New York and elsewhere in the United States as "Lady" Fitzgeorge, and who, through her marriage with the duke, was transferred to the title of the reigning family of England, and repeatedly expressed in print her hope and expectation that her two daughters, Miss Edith Fitzgeorge, who were under the guardianship of their uncle, Admiral Sir Adolphus Fitzgeorge, and her son, George, now an officer in the British navy, should marry into the house of Baring, and before marrying George Fitzgeorge was the wife of Colonel Frank W. Arkwright, of the Coldstream Guards, this marriage being sundered by the divorce court.

The name Fitzgeorge may be translated as "the son of George," and in this connection it may be mentioned that the natural children of royal personages in England usually bear the name of a reigning father, as illustrated by the word "Fitz." Thus, the large tribe of illegitimate children of King William IV, by the actress Mrs. Jordan, widely known in her day as Dolly Bland, bore the name of Fitz Clarence, owing to the fact that at the time of their birth their father was the Duke of Clarence. The patronymic of the nonagenarian Duke of Grafton, and also of Lord Southampton, is Fitzroy, which, together with the bend sinister across the royal arms of England, accorded to them as their heraldic device, serves to indicate that the first Duke of Grafton was the illegitimate son of Charles II, the "Roy" or King, by Barbara Villiers, Duchess of Cleveland.

Emperor Nicholas last spring bestowed upon his two eldest daughters the colonelcy of a regiment of the Third Hussars and of the Third Lancers, respectively, and during the course of the summer their photographs, garbed in the uniform of these crack corps, have been widely published on this side of the Atlantic. A fortnight ago the Czar held a big review at Krasnoe-Selo, near St. Petersburg, during the course of which Grand Duchess Olga, who is not quite eighteen, and Grand Duchess Tatiana, who is a little over sixteen, led their respective regiments past the Emperor, first at a trot and then at a gallop. As they are both very handsome and athletic girls, splendid equestrians, and look particularly fascinating in their uniform, this military debut of theirs was the feature of the pageant.

For those women and young girls in this country who insist on riding astride, I may add, that the two grand duchesses at the review used side saddles, and skirts, the latter being of the same hue as the voided skirt of their uniform, and just showing the top of the boot. They saluted, not with their swords, but with their riding whips, and, while Olga wore the bushy of the Hussars, Tatiana's head was coiffed with the czapka of the Lancers.

Sovereigns are theoretically brothers and sisters, and in official communications address one another as "Sire" or "Majesty." Privately, when they are the same age, they address each other as "cousins." This is only natural, since they are all more or less nearly allied to one another by ties of kinship. Where the difference of age is great, the seniors are addressed as "uncle" and "aunt," even when these titles are not warranted by the degree of relationship. Thus, Queen Victoria during the latter part of her life was addressed as "Aunt" by all the young generation of sovereigns and princes and princesses of the blood.

George V. and Queen Mary are therefore perfectly justified in having caused the presentation of the magnificent silver service which they have presented to King Manuel on the occasion of his wedding to be inscribed from "his affectionate cousins"; while Queen Alexandra is equally warranted by practice in the title of "deserving herself, in sending him his wedding present, as his "affectionate aunt."

"London Truth," which, in its latest issue, takes exception to this, is manifestly unaware of this custom, since it insists that Dom Manuel is not the nephew of Queen Alexandra, although the latter is always addressed as "Ma Tante" (aunt) by the Dukes of Orleans, of Montpensier, of Guise, Vendôme and Alençon, by the Duke and Duchess of Aosta, and even the Count of Turin, and the Duke of the Abruzzi, whose relationship to her is very remote in degree. If all these royal and noble King Christian of Denmark was always addressed as uncle by the present Emperor of Germany, who, in turn, signs his private communications to Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria as "Your affectionate nephew," in lieu of "brother."

It was the refusal of Czar Nicholas I. to accord the title of brother to Napoleon III, owing to the sanguinary coup d'état, by means of which he obtained the throne of France, that contributed in no small measure to the Crimean War. It also furnished the opportunity to Napoleon to make a witty response. For when he received an official communication from Czar Nicholas in which the latter styled him, not brother, but friend, the French monarch, addressing himself to the Muscovite ambassador at a reception in the diplomatic corps, exclaimed in the hearing of all present: "You may tell your master and sovereign that I am exceedingly flattered by his form of address; since one chooses one's friends, whereas one cannot select one's relatives." Presidents of republics are not addressed as "brothers," but as "great and good friends."

FRIENDLY FIGHTS FOR GENERAL GOOD

Retail Merchants "Conspiring" to Make the Fashion Show Biggest Thing Ever.

W. H. Schwarzschild, of the jewelry house of Schwarzschild Bros., and chairman of the publicity committee of the Retail Merchants' Association, speaking yesterday of the bright prospects of carrying to a successful conclusion the plans for the fashion week's display and untold openings, said: "We could not pull off anything great in Richmond without the help of the newspapers, and that is a help we can always count on if the thing to be pulled off is worthy of Richmond and to the interest of the city and the business of the city. When this united opening scheme for the four days beginning September 23 and continuing to and through September 26, was first agitated we felt that we could count on the assistance and the boosting ability of the press, and we have not been disappointed. Just as soon as the newspaper men looked far enough into the plans to be sure it was a scheme for the advancement of Richmond's interest they came right in with enthusiasm, and they are with us heart and soul. That is enough of itself to guarantee success if we merchants do our part, and we will."

W. H. Schwarzschild says it is gratifying to observe the good team work that all of the merchants are putting in. He thinks the fashion show is going to be one of the biggest things Richmond has ever seen, and that it will be indeed a show that will be worth going miles to see, for every retail merchant seems determined to make a better display and make his house more attractive than his neighbor's. With every man trying to reach the top rung of the ladder in the matter of making a fine and profitable show it may be set down as a fact that all of the other rungs will be something truly great.

Go where you may on Broad Street on Main Street or any of the other streets where a retail business is done, and you will not be able to get the merchants to talk of much else but the fashion show and the great things that are being done to make it the most attractive thing in Richmond. To give an idea of how effectively team work is being brought to bear there is really a contest among the merchants of one class to outdo those of other classes; for instance the dry goods men are putting their heads together and actually "conspiring" among themselves to outdo the millinery people and the jewelry people and the furniture people and the other classes, while each of these classes are "combining" against other classes, each putting forth efforts to make his class the leader. And all of this is being done in the friendliest kind of spirit, and incidentally the merchants are having a good deal of fun out of the "conspiracy." Truly the Richmond fashion show beginning September 23 is going to be a big thing.

Turkish Battleship Launched.
Barrow-in-Furness, England, September 4.—One of the most formidable battleships in the world, the Reshad-i-Hamis, was launched here to-day as the first unit in the rejuvenated Turkish navy. She displaces over 23,000 tons, and possesses an armament of ten 13.5-inch guns, thus exceeding in gun power any vessel in commission in the British navy. Her contract calls for a speed of twenty-one knots, and her turbine engines develop 31,000 horsepower.

Dublin Strike More Serious.
Dublin, September 4.—The strike situation here was rendered more acute to-day by a lock-out in the coal trade. The merchants at a meeting decided that they would no longer employ men belonging to the Transport Workers' Union, which will not permit its members to deliver the coal of certain firms. The feeling between workmen and employers is very bitter.

Prominent Hibernian Dead.
Philadelphia, September 4.—Nicholas Redmond, president of the Philadelphia County Board of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, and long prominent in Irish-American organizations, died of pneumonia to-day. On many occasions he acted as delegate to the Hibernian County, State and national conventions. For twenty-five years he was president of the Parnell Club, of Philadelphia. Mr. Redmond was sixty-eight years old.

CHAIRMAN CLARK WILL GUARD "PORK BARREL"

Washington, D. C., September 4.—Congressman Frank Clark, of Florida, chairman of the Committee on Building and Grounds, in a speech on the floor of the House to-day declared that as chairman of the committee just referred to he intended to see that hereafter applications for public buildings are held within reasonable limits. He said that while he had no objection to the spending of government funds for legitimate purposes, he thought that due caution should be given to the authorization of buildings all over the country when there is no real need for them. It will be his purpose when his committee brings in a bill this winter, Mr. Clark said, to see to it that not a penny of government money is wasted.

Congress has been criticized considerably in the past for its lavish expenditures, and the public buildings committee has often been denominated a "pork barrel" committee. There shall be no need for this hereafter, Mr. Clark said, although every legitimate proposition will have earnest consideration.
